

Maslow's hierarchy for the digital workplace

How Unisys digital workplace solutions drive business outcomes

Great work starts with great technology

People do their best when technology fits how they work and removes points of friction. But an exceptional employee tech experience is built in layers. Abraham Maslow's hierarchy of needs describes how people must meet their basic needs before they can reach their greatest potential. The modern workplace follows the same pattern, from the essentials of daily work to technology that understands people and helps them grow. With the right partner, you reach the apex faster and with fewer missteps.

Digital empathy

Technology that takes a human-centric view, anticipating needs and personalizing the experience

How Unisys helps:

We measure and improve the experience for every employee, whether remote, hybrid, or on-site, so it stays consistent for all roles.

The result: Employees are empowered to grow and can focus on high-level tasks. ↗

Proactive support

AI and automation that predict and resolve issues so effort goes toward doing great work, not troubleshooting tech

Our agentic AI and support teams resolve issues preemptively so people can focus on work that gets results.

The result: Employees are confident and can focus on their work without IT disruptions. ↗

Communication and collaboration

Platforms and AI-assisted tools that let teams work as one, anywhere

We configure and optimize innovative tools so teams stay in sync.

The result: Employees are connected to their teams and workplace. ↗

Secure environment

Flexible governance and security that protects without getting in the way

We build security into every layer, from devices to data.

The result: Employees work confidently, and leadership can trust that company data is protected. ↗

Device access

Connected, responsive, and secure devices

We put the right devices in people's hands and keep them working from day one.

The result: Employees are equipped to do their jobs. ↗

Get every layer right and the whole organization feels it. Stronger employee experience shows up as higher productivity, better retention, and work that moves the business forward.
